French photographer Jerome Brouillet knew he had the chance of capturing something special when Brazilian surfer Gabriel Medina caught one of the day's biggest waves.

At the perfect moment, Brouillet captured the Brazilian suspended in mid-air, as if stood on solid ground, as his board mimicked his stance.

"He is at the back of the wave and I can't see him and then he pops up and I took four pictures and one of them was this one," said Brouillet.

"It was not hard to take the picture. It was more about anticipating the moment and where Gabriel will kick off the wave.
